Meet Gina Pola-Money: UPC’s Associate Director

Gina Pola-Money has been with the UPC for 30 years. She is currently the Associate Director of the Utah Parent Center and has served as the Director of Utah Family Voices, Family-to-Family Health Information Center at the UPC. Gina collaborates closely with various partners including the Utah Department of Health, Bureau of Children with Special Health Care Needs, University of Utah – Department of Pediatrics, and Utah State University - Center for Persons with Disabilities to expand family centered care, parent/professional partnerships, medical home and family leadership for children and youth with special healthcare needs. Gina is the proud mom of five children, two of which had a genetic rare disorder and have since passed away, which has led to her passion of giving back in this field due to the expertise and experiences acquired throughout the last 32 years.

On a personal level, Gina can be found spending time with her family, specifically boating. This way, nobody can escape! She also has a passion for caring for and rescuing abused animals. Her fur babies at home are two yorkies, Addie and Luci and a Calico cat named Maya.

March is Cerebral Palsy Awareness Month

Cerebral palsy (CP) is a group of disorders that affect a person’s ability to move and maintain balance and posture. CP is the most common motor disability in childhood. Cerebral means having to do with the brain. Palsy means weakness or problems with using the muscles. CP is caused by abnormal brain development or damage to the developing brain that affects a person’s ability to control his or her muscles. The symptoms of CP vary from person to person. A person with severe CP might need to use special equipment to be able to walk, or might not be able to walk at all and might need lifelong care. A person with mild CP, on the other hand, might walk a little awkwardly, but might not need any special help. CP does not get worse over time, though the exact symptoms can change over a person's lifetime.

Color Coding to Support Executive Functioning Issues

Executive function is a set of mental processes that help us connect past experience with present action. These are skills and processes each of us use every day. Your child may lose track of main ideas, have difficulty checking their work and often forget to hand in completed work. If this sounds like your student or child, here are some organization ideas from understood.org.

- Assign a color to each child: If you have more than one child, let each of them choose a color. Then stick to their colors when you buy everyday items like towels, toothbrushes, water bottles, laundry bags and even electronics chargers.
- Use different color bags for different kinds of gear: Try organizing your child's activities by color. Use large washable sacks in different colors. For example, you can keep all her soccer supplies in a yellow bag, her ballet gear in a red one, and so on.
- Color code the family calendar: Consider investing in a giant wall calendar. You can use a different color for each family member as you write in events. For example, your child's violin lessons and doctor's appointments could be marked in green. Your board meetings and exercise classes might be red, and so forth. This can make it easier for your child to focus on what she needs to know to keep her schedule straight.
- Use different color of supplies for each school subject: When each class has its own color, it can make it easier for your child to see if she has everything she needs in her book bag. Use red, say, for her reading folder, textbook cover and notebook. Blue could be for math, and so on.
